Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its nineteenth session from 28 April to 9 May 2014. The review of Ethiopia was held at the 13th, meeting on 6 May 2014. The delegation of Ethiopia was headed by Berhane Gebre-Christos, State Minister of Foreign Affairs. At its 17th meeting, held on 8 May 2014, the Working Group adopted the report on Ethiopia.

2. On 15 January 2014, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Ethiopia: the Czech Republic, Kazakhstan and Namibia.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Ethiopia:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/ETH/1 and Corr.1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/ETH/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/ETH/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by the Czech Republic, Germany, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Ethiopia through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation of Ethiopia said that Ethiopia had taken a transparent and participatory approach in the preparation of the national report. The process had been led by the National Interministerial Committee and had involved the participation of various stakeholders and the dissemination of information on the implementation of the recommendations accepted at the first review.

6. Ethiopia had established a solid constitutional framework for the promotion and protection of human rights, which embedded ratified international human rights instruments. It guaranteed the human rights of all Ethiopians and ensured implementation of the rights of the nations, nationalities and peoples of Ethiopia to self-determination, to the preservation of their language, culture and history, and to representation and self-administration in the federal and regional states.

7. Ethiopia had made major strides in the promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. It had registered double digit growth over the previous 10 years and had integrated the goal of achieving good governance, the rule of law and human rights in the ongoing five-year Growth and Transformation Plan.

8. Ethiopia had adopted the first National Human Rights Action Plan (NHRAP). A Ministerial Steering Committee had been established for the formulation and implementation of the Plan, with the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission monitoring and evaluating its implementation. Mechanisms had been put in place for the participation of civil society.

9. The Proclamation on Charities and Societies ensured the realization of the right to freedom of association and provided an environment conducive to the growth and development of charities and societies. The Proclamation ensured accountability through predictability and transparency. It had created favourable conditions for the establishment and growth of grass-roots advocacy, and humanitarian and developmental civil society groups that could thrive and serve their members and society at large.

10. The Proclamation required civil society organizations to allot 70 per cent of their budget for programme activities and the remaining portion for overhead costs. Agreements had also been signed with foreign civil society groups and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

11. Ethiopia had zero tolerance for torture and inhuman, degrading or other cruel treatment, which were prohibited by the Constitution. Measures, including the Prison Administration Proclamation, were in place to protect the rights of persons deprived of their liberty.

12. The Ethiopian Human Rights Commission monitored prison conditions and had provided capacity-building training to police and prison officers. Legal and policy measures had been taken on the rights of persons to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. Religious groups had established an interreligious council to maintain and advance interreligious tolerance.

13. Ethiopia recognized the imperatives of respecting human rights while countering terrorism. Proclamations, consistent with international human rights obligations, had been promulgated on anti-terrorism and anti-money-laundering and the financing of terrorism. The Anti-Terrorism Proclamation would not be used to silence opposition.

14. Freedom of expression continued to thrive. Ethiopians freely advocated their views either in support of or in criticism of government policies and measures. The Freedom of Mass Media and Access to Information Proclamation had been implemented in accordance with relevant constitutional guarantees. A national task force, spearheaded by the institution of the Ombudsman, had been established to oversee the effective implementation of access to information provisions of the Proclamation.

15. The delegation reported on the various measures taken to improve the welfare of children and the measures taken to promote and protect the rights of women and ensure their equal participation in political affairs, economic and social empowerment, ownership of property, inheritance of and rights over resources, as well as to combat harmful traditional practices, including female genital mutilation (FGM), and child, early and forced marriage.

16. Ethiopia was committed to implementing effectively the laws and policy frameworks for promoting the human rights of persons with disabilities by integrating disability as a cross-cutting sector of development.

17. Ethiopia had also initiated the process of ratification of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (ICRMW) and had been working with host countries to advance the rights and interests of Ethiopian nationals abroad. It had intensified its efforts for the protection of the rights of migrants, with a special emphasis on migrant women and children. A national task force, chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, had been established for that purpose.

18. Ethiopia maintained an open door policy towards refugees and was hosting over half a million of them. It worked closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and other United Nations agencies to provide protection and assistance to the refugees and mitigate the effects of hosting a large refugee population on the local host communities and the environment.

19. Ethiopia was determined to ensure that the fifth national election, to be held in May 2015, would be free, fair and credible. The National Electoral Board and the judiciary had developed innovative systems for handling grievances and complaints during elections.

20. Ethiopia pursued a rights-based approach to development, with the objective of reducing poverty. Per capita income had increased and the proportion of the population living below the poverty line and the food poverty index had declined significantly.

21. Rapid economic growth had also enabled Ethiopia to undertake massive public investments in the social and infrastructure sectors. Investments in the construction of new health facilities and the upgrading of existing ones, and in strengthening the implementation of the health extension programme had brought about significant improvements in the health and well-being of the people. During 2012/2013, primary health service coverage had reached 93 per cent, while significant progress had been made in improving maternal and child health. Ethiopia had already achieved the Millennium Development Goal target of reducing child mortality by two thirds well before the 2015 deadline.

22. Massive investments had been made in the expansion of primary, secondary and tertiary education. Primary education was free for all citizens. The primary gross enrolment rate had increased to 95.4 per cent, and over 17.3 million children had been enrolled in primary schools in 2012/13. That progress had brought Ethiopia closer to achieving the Millennium Development Goal target of universal access to primary education. The gender parity index in primary schools as approximated by the ratio of girls to boys had reached 0.94:1 in 2012/13.

23. Ethiopia had invested massively in road maintenance and construction, in potable water supply and in energy and irrigation schemes, which demonstrated the positive impact of the economic growth on improving the non-income dimension of its citizens' welfare. In line with its focus on eradicating poverty, the Government had allocated a higher share of its budget to pro-poor sectors.

24. Since the first UPR cycle, Ethiopia had ratified the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (OP-CRC-AC) and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (OP-CRC-SC). Ethiopia had also submitted implementation reports under the International Convention on All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), the Convention on All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), CRPD, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child.

55. Denmark welcomed, inter alia, the proposals in the NHRAP to promote the rights of vulnerable groups, but was concerned that the Plan did not provide a sufficient role for civil society.
56. Djibouti said that Ethiopia had contributed to the African Union since its inception and had played a significant role in combating regional terrorism.
57. The delegation of Ethiopia stated that the pillars underpinning implementation of the NHRAP were: creating supervisory bodies to monitor the performance plans of implementing institutions; raising awareness of the Plan; collaborating with development partners and civil associations, and public participation; utilizing the national human rights institutions (NHRIs); and promoting human rights education.
58. Accepted UPR recommendations, reports to United Nations and African Union human rights bodies and corresponding feedback had been taken into consideration in developing the Action Plan, thus providing a good opportunity for Ethiopia to implement its international commitments.
59. The Action Plan envisaged that NHRIs would act as independent monitoring bodies, while the Ombudsman would monitor implementation of the Plan in connection with the exercise of administrative and executive powers. Each implementing body had developed detailed annual plans, which were monitored by federal and regional legislative bodies. Comprehensive reporting mechanisms had also been put in place at the federal and regional levels.
60. The delegation stated that the Constitution guaranteed the independence of the judiciary and set out court structures and powers. Judicial independence was key to Ethiopia's legal system. To increase access to justice, there was a need to build capacity and train more judges, prosecutors and police officers; a number of steps had been taken in that direction.

61. Ecuador recognized recent progress in human rights, including ratification of CRPD, and noted the creation of the NHRAP.
62. Egypt noted measures for ensuring the broadest possible enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms.
63. Equatorial Guinea noted the successful introduction of human rights legislation, the priority given to fairness in education, and improved and extended health care.
64. Estonia stated that harmful traditional practices should be condemned, marital rape recognized as a criminal act and measures taken against domestic violence.
65. Finland acknowledged action taken to introduce human rights in legislation and in practice.
66. France commended ratification of CRPD and welcomed the progress Ethiopia had made in ensuring women's rights and social rights.
67. Gabon welcomed ratification of international human rights instruments and measures taken to protect the most vulnerable and combat discrimination against women and children.
68. Germany made recommendations.
69. Ghana stated that Ethiopia must, inter alia, address concerns raised by UNHCR; ratify ICRMW and other treaties and protocols, and submit periodic reports due in 2014. Ethiopia should also decriminalize defamation, issue a standing invitation to all special procedures and establish an independent NHRI in compliance with the Paris Principles.
70. Haiti welcomed adoption of the NHRAP and ratification of CRPD.
71. The Holy See stated that while poverty had been reduced, challenges remained.

93. Montenegro enquired about measures to combat human trafficking and support victims; and to establish a complaints mechanism to investigate reports of torture committed by security personnel.
94. Morocco commended the economic development and the GTP. It welcomed the commitment to poverty eradication and the Millennium Development Goals.
95. The delegation stated that the Government was committed to addressing gender inequality and enhancing women's empowerment and reported on measures taken. Those measures had led to falling statistics for FGM and early, child and forced marriage. Religious leaders had also been instrumental in combating FGM and other harmful practices.
96. Affirmative action to empower women was in place, fostering the increased participation of women in public affairs, including in the decision-making process.
97. Measures had been taken to ensure women's equal access to economic resources and the growing number of women entrepreneurs was encouraging. Several strategies, packages and action plans had been devised to reduce maternal and child mortality, which had helped ensure achievement of the relevant Millennium Development Goals.
98. Ethiopia was also committed to improving the rights and welfare of children and was taking steps to eliminate corporal punishment in family settings, which was prohibited under the Constitution.

99. Mozambique commended the opening of branches of EHRC in some states. It praised the ratification of CRPD.

127. South Sudan commended the NHRAP, noted the economic development, and encouraged implementation of the poverty reduction policy.
128. Spain welcomed the moratorium on the death penalty and national strategies to combat violence against women.
129. Sri Lanka recognized efforts to promote human rights, eradicate poverty and reduce child and maternal mortality, noting progress in education.
130. The State of Palestine noted improved women's rights and health-care access. It expressed concern regarding unequal health-care provision and maternal mortality.
131. The Sudan was pleased that Ethiopia had positively considered its recommendations made in the first UPR and had been able to generate more than 2,600,000 jobs in the previous two years.
132. Sweden expressed concern about civil society exclusion, and limitations on the freedoms of expression and association under the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation.
133. Switzerland remained concerned about limitations on civil society and the freedoms of expression and association, detention conditions, torture and arbitrary detention.
134. Thailand commended ratification of the CRPD and the Palermo Protocol, the newly-established NHRI, the NHRAP and enhanced health-care access.
135. Togo noted ratification of the CRPD, legislation on civil registration, and strategies to reduce poverty and attain the Millenium Development Goals.
136. Tunisia encouraged further efforts to combat violence and discrimination against women and children, and to facilitate civil society action.

137. Uganda noted improved access to potable water, creation of the “Health Development Army” and the NHRAP.

138. The United Arab Emirates commended Ethiopia’s efforts to eliminate poverty by the adoption of new laws and the development of programmes for transforming the country into a middle-income economy.

139. The United Republic of Tanzania applauded the GTP. It encouraged further efforts towards gender parity in education and attaining the Millennium Development Goals.

140. The United States of America was concerned at restrictions on civil society activity and the arbitrary detention of human rights defenders, journalists and opposition political figures.

141. Uruguay noted progress since the first UPR cycle, highlighting the NHRAP.

142. Bolivia (Plurinational State of) welcomed the advances towards the eradication of poverty, reduced infant mortality and improved access to health services.

143. Viet Nam appreciated the effective implementation of the GTP, integrating strategies of economic development, enhancement of democracy and assurances of social justice.

144. Yemen commended the enactment of several laws for the protection of human rights, the fight against poverty, the progressive achievements in the field of development, and the expansion of the activity of EHRC.

145. Zambia commended Ethiopia’s constitutional guarantees of human rights and noted its efforts for poverty eradication, reduction in child mortality, increased access to school and the provision of health services.

146. Zimbabwe noted Ethiopia’s commitment to economic, social and cultural rights evidenced by the adoption of programmes to ensure food security, potable water supply, education and health care.

148. The United Kingdom expressed concern regarding limitations on freedom of expression, mistreatment of prisoners and abuse allegations.

149. The Democratic People’s Republic of Korea appreciated the country’s commitment to, and progress in, protecting and promoting human rights.

150. The delegation stated that legislative acts triggered by the Government’s policy reforms had created an enabling environment for the media. The Freedom of Mass Media and Access to Information Proclamation had brought about important reforms. Public interest disclosure legislation for the protection of whistle-blowers would be submitted for public deliberation. A public record policy, legislation and regulations were being finalized with a view to facilitating the speedy implementation of the Proclamation.

151. The Government had recently organized stakeholder consultative forums to assist in identifying structural and institutional shortcomings in the media sector: problems included inadequate media professionalism, pluralism, competition or self-regulatory mechanisms, an underdeveloped advertising market, poor media management capacity and a lack of governmental subsidies. The Government had encouraged the media community to establish an independent media council to regulate misconduct. Higher professional training institutions were being established in more than 18 universities.

152. Conventional criminal procedures had proved unequal to the task of combating terrorism. The Anti-Terrorism Proclamation had drawn heavily on best legislative practices from around the world. The Proclamation was never used to stifle dissent. The very few individuals who allegedly had journalistic backgrounds had been tried and convicted for their involvement in clandestine terrorist networks rather than for their journalistic activities.

153. The National Defence Force had earned respect for its integrity and discipline during all its peacekeeping activities in Africa.

154. Ethiopia had put in place democratic mechanisms for regional and national elections. The members of an independent Electoral Board were appointed through a transparent and democratic vetting mechanism involving all political parties. Representatives of almost all parties participated in an inter-party dialogue forum to settle electoral disputes. National and regional public service broadcasters and their commercial counterparts offered free air slots to competing political parties during electoral campaigns. The law permitted civil society to observe the national elections.

158.51 Revise the 2009 Anti-Terrorism Proclamation and the 2008 Mass Media Proclamation, bringing them into line with international human rights standards (Austria);

158.52 Remove vague provisions in the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation that can be used to criminalize the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and association and ensure that criminal prosecutions do not limit the freedom of expression of civil society, opposition politicians and independent media (Sweden);

158.53 Conduct a full review of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation, amending the law as necessary to ensure that it strengthens the rule of law and is applied apolitically and in full compliance with Ethiopia's international human rights obligations (United States).

159. All conclusions and/or recommendations contained in the present report reflect the position of the submitting State(s) and/or the State under review. They should not be construed as endorsed by the Working Group as a whole.
